A new website for Canvas - probably not going to look like this forever Project Canvas has finally got an official website, allowing the IPTV project fronted by the BBC to begin a lengthy education project for the general public.Although Project Canvas is still being talked over by the BBC Trust, a website has now appeared at ."We launched projectcanvas.info today, a hub for the partners (BBC, ITV, BT, Five) to host information about the project," said the BBC's Richard Dalton – Director of Project Canvas in the BBC internet blog.Important outletThe BBC Internet blog has been an important outlet for us but as canvas has a broader audience (and is not just a BBC project) we wanted a neutral space to communicate; its content reflects the views of the partnership," he added."With Freeview going past 10m homes this week, and Freesat continuing to make strong progress, it's a timely reminder of the importance of the UK's free-to-air platforms. As shareholders in both of these ventures, the BBC sees project canvas as critical to keeping them relevant."Although it is the driving force behind the project, Canvas also involves ITV, Five and BT.ObjectionsThe likes of Sky, along with manufacturers, have raised objections to the project, and the Trust is yet to make a final decision – although few believe that it will be thrown out in the long run.Both Dalton and Erik Huggers have stated their believe that the first Project Canvas boxes could appear by Christmas 2010 if the Trust makes a decision quickly.The website is basic, to say the least, although you could probably speculate that this is as much down to the fact that anything ostentatious would be seen as over-confidence that Canvas will go ahead. With these powerful and versatile multipurpose website templates, you can create a striking and engaging online presence for any niche and industry. Regardless of their field, all businesses strive toward maximizing efficiency. By conserving resources and increasing productivity, profits will rise. Even on a small scale, this golden principle applies. When it comes to website development, the tools, features, plugins and add-ons are limitless. A smart financial decision would be not to purchase each feature individually, but to find a package that includes as many essential features as possible. For your information, multipurpose HTML templates can offer that service. Like their name suggests, they can fill almost any role, and accommodate all market niches. Skip to WordPress themesSkip to HTML templates A multipurpose theme is a lump of clay, ready to be shaped into something useful. This property of adaptability is priceless, in a time when technology and trends constantly threaten mediocre products with obsolescence. In addition, when the landscape changes and the need for modification arise, you need to make sure that your site won't be left behind. Even multipurpose templates have individual flavors and specific attributes, yet the core principle remains the same: no need is left unsatisfied. From practical Mega Menus to fully responsive layouts, you will be able to use a broad toolkit as you strive for success. That being said, let's look at some of the best multipurpose HTML5/ CSS3 website templates.
