Image: skynesher/E+/Getty Images Cats vs. dogs is considered one of the biggest rivalries in the world, right up there with Yankees vs. Red Sox, soda vs. pop, and Yanny vs. Laurel. But do they really dislike each other that much?In fact, research about the relationships between cats and dogs shows that many of them live amicably together. The key variable is the age at which they were introduced to each other—cats and dogs who grow up together from birth typically form a close relationship. Even in households where a dog and cat were introduced to each other later in life, there is still a chance they can get along. As you might expect, both species have separate approaches to the relationship: cats are typically more aggressive and threatening towards their canine counterparts.On the other hand, dogs tend to be more obedient and outwardly affectionate. They are better suited for strenuous physical activity like climbing hills or running long distances. The question is, which animal matches up with your personality? But if you had to pick just one thing, you could make the case that dogs are super adaptive to their surroundings. They can be trained to do all kinds of things if you keep at them and they will learn habits from you, too. They'll learn their name, they'll get excited when you come in the door or bark at a stranger who shouldn't be around. They'll play fetch, or dance when they know a treat is coming. They'll do all kinds of fun dog things. But then, every so often, they won't. Sometimes, just sometimes, a dog will very much be a cat and it's hard to figure out why. What makes a dog a cat? How can that even be a thing? When you experience it, you know it. When that big dog tries to curl up on your lap. When it begs for tuna. When it just won't do what a pup is supposed to do, then there's a very good chance your dog is just a cat in disguise. Hey, it happens. But did it happen to you? Tell us a little bit about your pup and we'll let you know! Copyright © 2021 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 Company Making a running partner out of your pet is great for the health and happiness of both the owner and the dog. Not only will it create a special bond as you spend time together, it's also a great way to get in some added exercise. Choosing the right breed of dog to run with is a tricky task. Luckily, Battersea Dogs & Cats can help to make the decision easier. "Running with your dog is great fun for both of you and the health advantages are obvious," explains Shaun Opperman, Head Vet at Battersea, to Country Living UK. "Just bear in mind your dog's age, ability and level of fitness. Some of the flat faced breeds (Pugs, French Bulldogs and the like) can struggle with their breathing during exercise and you should always be mindful of the outdoor temperature, especially with summer approaching. As ever, speak to your vet if you have any concerns." Before choosing the right dog for you, consider these tips:Check with your vet:It is always wise to consult with your vet before starting an exercise programme with your dog. Vets can recommend both the length of time and intensity for the programme, and tailor this to your pet's special needs." says Shaun.Size up your dog:Different breeds are more agile than others. Develop the length of the walk based on the breed of the dog. Make sure the length of the walk is in line with what what your dog can comfortably complete," says Shaun. Start out slowly "It's important to start training at your dog's current fitness level. This is especially true if your dog is older, or overweight. Make sure you start every session with a walk. Just like humans, dogs need to warm up too," says Shaun.Watch out for tiredness:Listen and watch for signs of fatigue and make sure you have plenty of water with you. Pay close attention to your dog's footpads for signs of wear. Avoid hot surfaces and trails with sharp rocks," says Shaun. Exercise at cooler times of the day and avoid extremely hot and humid days.Bring a lead "Off-lead exercise is normally recommended, but if your route is out in public, we advise that you always run with your dog on a lead. We strongly recommend that you use a harness to reduce any tension around your dog's neck," says Shaun.10 BEST DOG BREEDS FOR RUNNERS According to Battersea Dogs and Cats Home. Look out for these in rescue centres...1.Mongrel (dependant on mix of breeds) John McKeenGetty Images "Depending on the mix of breeds, Mongrels can make excellent running partners. Any issues that relate to breathing or joints that certain breeds may suffer with could have been eliminated in a mongrel, making them the perfect athlete," explains Shaun.2. Staffordshire Bull Terriers HamikusGetty Images "Although this breed can be quite stocky, they can also be very energetic and love to be outdoors keeping active. Staffies are typically a very sociable breed, who love to be around their favourite people as much as possible, making them the ideal running partner."3. Huskies 0213erikaGetty Images "Huskies are bred to be sled dogs, and are likely to enjoy the mental and physical stimulation that running will bring. This breed have a very thick coat, perfect for running on cold winter days, but avoid taking them for a run on hot summer days."4. Springer Spaniels Kieran GradyGetty Images "Much like their name suggests, Springers often have plenty of energy and love to be kept active. Typically an intelligent and friendly breed, Springers are often used as working dogs and will enjoy being kept mentally and physically stimulated, who will enjoy fun runs."5. Labradors Purple Collar Pet PhotographyGetty Images "Labradors are a working breed, and often love to be out and about. Many Labradors are both lean and sturdy, with plenty of energy to burn and a certainly a breed who will thrive from being kept active. Often a friendly and sociable breed, Labradors may love exploring new areas with their favourite people."6. German Pointer ShinyfamilyGetty Images "Much like Labradors, German Pointers are bred to be a working dog, and are often great endurance runners. An ideal partner for active owners who like to go for a longer run." 7. Boarder Collie R A KeartonGetty Images "Another working breed, Border Collies thrive from regular physical and mental stimulation. Often a highly intelligent breed, Collies excel at activities such as agility and will make an excellent running buddy"8. Lurcher ChrisAtGetty Images "Lurchers are a sighthound, and are often known for their speed. This lean breed may enjoy a sprint, rather than endurance run."9. German Shepards Alan Tunnicliffe Getty Images "Though they be small, Jack Russells are a mighty breed who have plenty of energy to burn and could keep up with even the biggest of dogs. Thanks to their portable size, Jack Russells could make the perfect adventure companion for intrepid explorers."10. Jack Russell Brighton Dog PhotographyGetty Images "Though they be small, Jack Russells are a mighty breed who have plenty of energy to burn and could keep up with even the biggest of dogs. Thanks to their portable size, Jack Russells could make the perfect adventure companion for intrepid explorers."Battersea Dogs & Cats Home are encouraging humans and their dogs to take up the Muddy Dog Challenge to help raise money for all of the dogs and cats in their care. But with the advent of high-design pet homes, it might not be so bad. Lately, architects and designers have turned animal real estate into a veritable art form. Here are the most elegantly designed dwellings for your pets, excluding this $31,600 Hello Kitty princess dog palace. (Shouldn't that be illegal?) "Architecture for Dogs," a project spearheaded by Muji's creative director, Kenya Hara, took the canine housing crisis very seriously. Top architects, including Shigeru Ban, MVRDV, and, appropriately, Atelier Bow-Wow, designed dwellings tailored for particular dog breeds. "Dogs are man-made creatures forced to co-habitate with humans, so architecture for dogs is a reasonable inquiry," Hara told Co.Design. Highlights include a pug nest; a Jack Russell hammock; and a pram-like mobile home for stumpy-legged, easily tired Shibas.The Fishbone House Riffs Off Cats' First Love (Fish) Korean design studio Pote just unveiled their "Fishbone House" of birch timber, inspired by the skeletal form of a fish in a market. Like Jonah in the whale, pets can enter their Fishbone House to escape the stresses of a human-filled world.A Doghouse Made of Milk Bones Back in 2012, Oslo-based Jarmund/Vignsnaes Architects brought us the Happy Dog Retreat. Its structural system draws on the Norwegian Notch joint (think sophisticated Lincoln Logs), but it's built from milk bone-shaped pieces of Kebony wood. (What's the human equivalent, sleeping in a hut made of burger-shaped bricks?) Canadian company Loyal Luxe sells feline furniture for those of us who see our pets as people (because they are people). Cardboard teepees and cabins let your cats camp glamorously.Swanky Shelters Keep Stray Cats Warm In The Winter The Giving Shelter Design Competition asked architects to create refuges for homeless urban felines. From a hut made of cardboard rolls to a hovel-like structure with shag carpeting, these homes make feral look fashionable.Climbable Modular Housing For Cats The Kitty Kasa collection, from Studio Mango in collaboration with animal rescue nonprofit ARNI Foundation, includes a kitty gym, a recreation center, and a bedroom, all as stackable modules. Good Dog! Photo by Scott Barbour / Getty Images Okay, cats can technically be trained, but even cat lovers admit that it's not usually as easy as training a dog. Even food-motivated cats will soon tire of training sessions and walk away. Or, they'll just smack the food out of your hand and eat it anyway. In general, cats train us humans better than we could ever train them. On the other hand, most dogs actually enjoy training. It seems to give them a sense of purpose. It's a job, and most dogs love to work. Plus, many dogs are highly motivated by food and attention. They'll gladly sit, stay, shake, lie down, and roll over in exchange for a delicious reward. Dogs seem to display a sense of pride when they've done a good job. In fact, dogs sometimes misbehave when they're bored. They need more exercise and mental stimulation. Training helps provide the latter. Continue to 6 of 11 below.
