Take these statistics: If creating a viral video shared by thousands of people is something you'd like to do, take some advice from Dhar Mann, founder and CEO of LiveGlam, a cosmetics company that he took from $600 in starting capital to eight figures in annual revenue in less than two years. On social media, his motivational videos on life and business have been viewed over 250 million times and shared by millions of people in less than six months. Here are his words on how to get started. Quality of video really doesn't matter much and in fact can have an adverse affect on viewership. When the quality's too good people think they're watching a commercial or being sold something. Many of the most viral videos were shot on a mobile phone with a shaky hand, poor lighting and bad audio. It makes it feel raw and authentic. My advice would be don't get too hung up on spending a lot on hardware in the beginning because it's not a barrier to entry. The most important part is being consistent with your content and then upgrading over time. I don't create content full time so I've hired a videographer to shoot and edit for me. The money my content brings in more than pays for my production costs. If you have some starting capital, hiring a videographer can save you a lot of time and headache. If you don't have any starting capital then you'll have to roll up your sleeves and learn for yourself. My advice would be start with Adobe Premiere, Final Cut Pro or iMovie. The software isn't too expensive and allows you export into any one of the dozens of file formats Facebook accepts, including the most popular MP4 or MOV formats. For Facebook my videos average between three to four minutes is the required length to place ads on your videos are below that. Beyond four minutes most people don't have the attention span and will swipe out. For YouTube people have a longer attention span so four to five minutes would be the sweet spot. For IGTV I haven't seen a clear content length winner, but the rule of thumb with any content is don't make it longer than it needs to be. There's no right or wrong way, but I'm constantly looking for ways to trim down my length as people's attention spans are consistently decreasing. I've developed a viral checklist for Facebook that helps me create content that's viral worthy:- Captivate the audience with something shocking in the first 10 seconds- Invoke a strong emotional reaction- Don't rely on dialogue- the video should make sense without sound- Have an unexpected, ironic twist- Create relatable content that brings back memories for the viewer- Understand your target audience and create content for them, not you. Use hot button issues that people are already thinking about. Consistency is key and virality is a numbers game. Create content native to each platforms and their algorithms will do the work for you. That's why you see a lot of stories going viral from everyday people without a following. It should come naturally to you. If you are a funny person then choose comedy. If you're great at giving advice then choose to interview others. The marketplace has room for lots of different content types and personality types that's why you have both six-year olds and 60-year olds making millions of dollars a year on YouTube. FailArmy is back and doing what they do best with this funny compilation video of ordinary kids messing up in extraordinary ways. If you like watching cute kids do really silly stuff, this is for you. Don't worry; nobody got hurt... except for wounded pride, that is. Via YouTube/BabiezTV. Kids and animals are almost always a winning combination. This compilation video is a collection of little kids having close encounters with the animal kingdom at their local zoos. All of these videos are cute, nobody gets hurt, and each one makes you suddenly develop a new appreciation for very strong glass windows. Also, who else had no clue how often lions try to eat babies at the zoo? It happens a shocking number of times if this video is to be believed. Via YouTube. If you need a pick-me-up, stop what you are doing right this minute and watch this video. The title says it all: It's just ten minutes of cute babies laughing and being adorable. Pure bliss! 2007 SMP Films. It's no accident SMP Films. It's no accident SMP Films. It's no accident SMP Films. and a catchy song has led to internet gold. The fact that "The Mean Kitty Song" is so funny and completely suitable for kids makes the video all the more special. 2006 Happyslip. Filipino-American video blogger Christine Gambito created her video all the more special. video, Gambito, who goes by the online persona Happy Slip, comes home just after witnessing a scary traffic accident and tries to tell, her mother, her family members (each also played by Gambito in different costumes and wigs) keep interjecting to change the subject. The humor of the clean and very funny video struck a chord with many on the Internet, garnering it over 4 million views. Via YouTube/All Of Vine. A collection of funny kid-themed Vine videos that come with the challenge "Try Not To Laugh." How'd you do? 2007 Potter Pals. The Potter Puppets (puppet versions of the Harry Potter classics Severus Snape, Ron Weasley, Harry Potter, Dumbledore, and Hermione) all hear a ticking noise. And rather funny (and rather popular, at almost 65 million views) video is still great for kids and adults alike. 2006 William Nilsson. This viral videos on YouTube ever (at over 87 million views). It's also one of the most viewed videos on YouTube ever (at over 87 million views). It's also one of the simplest videos as well; a Swedish father keeps making weird noises, prompting his baby, the adorable William Nilsson, to laugh in his strange, deep-voiced-for-a-baby laugh. The universal humor of the video lies in this simplicity and makes it suitable for the youngest of kids all the way to someone as old as, say, the Queen of England, who was shown the video in 2008. 2006 Barats and Bereta. In Luke Barats and Joe Bereta's viral video sensation "Mother's Day," the viewer is given the opportunity of being a fly on the wall while two brothers (played by Barats and Bereta) argue over how to take a photo they're planning on sending their mom for Mother's Day. Sibling rivalry turns to rage and this comedy duo (who go by the name Barats and Bereta) deliver a classic viral video good for viewers young and old. 2007 Brandon Hardesty. Brandon Hardesty is a very funny comedian and actor whose work on the web has been praised by The Village Voice. But if Hardesty is a very funny faces. And in the web classic, "Strange Faces and Noises I Can Make III," Hardesty does just that and the resulting video has some of the funniest noises and faces you will ever see. 2006 Melody Oliveria got a new webcam that had some funny effects, like putting mustaches, beards, and hats on its subject, she decided to record a video showing that off and put it up on YouTube. Does one have to wonder if when she was recording that simple demo, Oliveria knew her video was about to be a viral sensation? 2007 Harry and Charlie, two adorable kids, 1 camera, stir gently. Brothers Harry and Charlie, two adorable kids hailing from the United Kingdom, are unlikely stars of one of the most watched videos online, ever. The boys' father set a camera down to record them doing funny stuff. And at first, they oblige. But then Charlie, a teething baby boy, bites down hard on Harry's finger. And as Harry's finger. And as Harry's laughter turns to tears, a smile comes over our faces—these are just two adorable kids being completely and utterly real. Awww! 2004 Gary Brolsma. One of the few crossovers from the regular Top 20 Viral Videos list. The video's creator and star, overweight and quirky internet celebrity Gary Brolsma, taped himself singing along to Moldovan pop group O-Zone's song "Dragostea Din Tei." The combination of the incredibly strange song and Brolsma's weird dance moves made the video an instant internet sensation that has spawned several imitators, but nothing beats the original, 2005 Brookers. Were any of the Numa Numa imitation videos to give the original some competition, it'd be "Crazed Numa Fan" by Brooke Brodack, who goes by the online monicker Brookers. In the video, Brodack plays the titular role of a crazed Numa Numa fan, obsessed with Gary Brolsma and his Numa performance. Where Brolsma's original video found its humor in the slightly overweight star's laid-back lip-dub performance, the "Crazed Numa Fan" video squeezes laughs out of Brodack's frenetic, over-the-top delivery. 2008 Lucas Cruikshank. In "Fred Goes Swimming," Nebraska teenager Lucas Cruikshank plays Fred Figglehorn, a 6-year-old boy filled with enough energy to power the Eastern Seaboard. By speeding up the video, Fred is given an "Alvin and the Chipmunks" style voice and his movement resemble an old Buster Keaton silent film. So, when you put all those elements together and throw the whole mess into a kiddie pool in Cruikshank's backyard, you've got viral video magic. 2007 Tay Zonday. This other holdover from the main Top 20 Viral Videos list is a rather simple video—Tay Zonday, the video's singer, and star, stands at his microphone and belts out a strange song about, well, a rain made out of chocolate while text on screen (written by Zonday after he filmed himself singing the song) making fun of the song and the video itself. Words can't really describe how strange—and funny—this video is. 2006 Amy Castle. We all know that kids say the darndest things too? At least that's the case with then 3-year-old Amy Castle, who, in 1994, recorded the strange but adorable "The Cuppycake Song." Be prepared to laugh, smile and loudly yell out "Awwwww!" 2005 Wei Wei and Huang Yixin. Why are these two Chinese guys, dressed in matching Houston Rockets basketball jerseys and headbands, lip syncing to the Backstreet Boys' hit song "I Want It That Way"? Keep watching... your questions will quickly dissipate as your laughter sets in—this video, by the Back Dorm Boys (Wei Wei and Huang Yixin), is one of the funniest online. 2007 Dan Brown's "How To Solve a Rubik's Cube" videos are exactly as they sound—Brown teaches the viewer how to, well, solve a Rubik's Cube. While that doesn't sound like a video that has the necessary the ingredients make it become viral, Brown's fun, upbeat and oftentimes funny banter while teaching you how to solve the Cube propels what could've been a boring tutorial to the stratosphere of mass Internet popularity. Part two of his tutorial can be seen here. 2006 Anthony Padilla and Ian Hecox. Anthony Padilla anthony Pa a young man on a deserted island writing increasingly ridiculous diary entries about life on his island. Though the entries dip into cannibalism and some poop jokes, it's all done in a fun and upbeat manner that keeps this widely viewed video great for kids. 2006 Kent Nichols and Doug Sarine. Kent Nichols and Doug Sarine's "Ask A Ninja" series shouldn't make sense—why is this ninja so hyperactive... and why is he answering viewers' questions? But with Sarine's frenetic and hilarious performance as The Ninja, you soon forget your confusion and start guffawing. The episode "Ask A Ninja: Special Delivery 1 "What is Podcasting??" is the funniest and most popular of the lot, but you can see all their videos at the Ask A Ninja YouTube channel. 2005 Lim Jeong-hyun. How is it that a performance of Pachelbel's Canon one of the most viewed viral videos of all time? Well, you can thank the South Korean teenage guitar sensation Lim Jeong-Hyun, who goes by the online alias fun two, delivers the goods over the most rocking 5 minutes and 20 seconds you will find online. 2008 Lisa Nova, is an incredibly skilled actress and comedian and in her viral video "Keira and Johnny! Behind the Scenes—Pirates of the Caribbean" she impersonates actress Keira Knightley in a performance that's as loose as it is funny. The premise—that Johnny Depp, Knightley's co-star on the Pirates of the Caribbean films, is unimpressed with Knightley entirely—pushes Knightley is perched in a tree, begging a napping Depp to "come and play." The video's success is hinged mostly on Donovan's charm as an actress, and she delivers one of the best comedic performances you'll find online. 2007 Kevin Wu. When Chinese-American teenager Kevin Wu sat down at his webcam to rant about the stereotypes he has to deal with in his everyday life, everything came together and his video shot to viral fame. Wu, an aspiring comedian who goes by the online handle KevinJumba, mixed humor, honesty and the end product is something every kid should see. Via YouTube. Dancing kids are always funny! Check out these chunky monkeys doing their best Patrick Swayze impressions in this funny compilation video.
