Painting, typography, architecture, textile design, furniture-making, theater design, stained glass, woodworking, metalworking—these all found a place there. The Bauhaus style of architecture featured rigid angles of glass, masonry and steel, together creating patterns and resulting in buildings that some historians characterize as looking as if no human had a hand in their creation. These austere aesthetics favored function and mass production, and were influential in the worldwide redesign of everyday buildings that did not hint at any class structure or hierarchy. Gropius remained as director for nine years and steered the Bauhaus school into developing a cohesive style, though that was not his original intention. Moholy-Nagy was known for darkroom experimentation, utilizing photograms and exploring light to create abstract elements through distortion, shadow and skewed lines, similar to the works of Man Ray though conceived separately from them. Michael Siebenbrodt and Lutz Schöbe The Bauhaus Group: Six Masters of Modernism. He began in the glass painting workshop and taught furniture design, drawing and lettering. But the National Socialists continued to harass the school, attacking what the Nazis perceived as a Soviet Communist ideology and demanding that Nazi sympathizers replace select faculty members. The faculty flatly refused to work with the Nazis, and rather than cooperate with them, the school was closed in 1933 by the faculty's vote. Albers was appointed to the teaching staff in 1923 before he had even completed his courses at the school. The school moved to Dessau in 1925 and then to Berlin in 1932, after which Bauhaus—under constant harassment by the Nazis—finally closed. Schlemmer was known for focusing all his disciplines on the human body. Kandinsky remained with the school until its closing. László Moholy-Nagy Hungarian artist László Moholy-Nagy arrived at the school in 1923 to teach classes and run a metal workshop, but his real passion was for photography. Moholy-Nagy also created sculptures such as his kinetic light and motion machines called "light modulators" and abstract, geometrical paintings. Oskar Schlemmer Oskar Schlemmer taught at the school from 1920 to 1929, specializing in design, sculpture and murals, but preferring to pursue theater. Art in Time: A World History of Styles and Movements. The movement encouraged teachers and students to pursue their crafts together in design studios and workshops. His most famous work of the Bauhaus era is a glass painting from 1928, City. Phaidon. Bauhaus 1919–1933. Surrealist painters Joan Miró and André Masson credit Klee as a major influence on their work. Wassily Kandinsky Painter Wassily Kandinsky began teaching in 1922. Home Visual Arts Architecture Bauhaus was an influential art and design movement that began in 1919 in Weimar, Germany. Joseph Albers Joseph Albers is best known during his time in the Bauhaus school for his glass pictures in 1928, which utilized glass fragments. Instruction focused less on function (like so many Bauhaus offerings) and more on abstraction. H.H. Arnason and Maria F. Nicholas Fox Weber. History of Modern Art. Philip B. The Bauhaus movement championed a geometric, abstract style featuring little sentiment or emotion and no historical nods, and its aesthetic continues to influence architects, designers and artists. Walter Gropius The Weimar school founded by architect Walter Gropius in 1919 was inspired by Expressionist art and the work of architect Frank Lloyd Wright and designer William Morris Purvis. Following this decision, Mies van der Rohe, Gropius, the Albers and many others within the Bauhaus school fled to the United States, where they continued to have a profound and lasting influence on 20th-century art and design. Sources Meggs' History of Graphic Design. Starting in 1925, Gropius oversaw the move to Dessau, allowing the opportunity for the principles of Bauhaus to manifest in the school's physical space. During his tenure at Bauhaus, Kandinsky's work became more focused on abstract shapes and lines, as displayed in his 1923 painting Composition VIII. Meggs and Alston W. His most famous work, 1922's The Triadic Ballet, Schlemmer transformed his dancers in kinetic sculptures by costuming them in geometric shapes made from metal, cardboard and wood. Under his leadership, the school moved during a struggle for survival with Germany's ever-encroaching National Socialist Party, whose interference demanded experimental work be toned down as it seized control of the school. End of the Bauhaus Mies van der Rohe's solution to Nazi intervention in the school was to move it to an empty telephone factory in Berlin and designate it a private institution. Its creators believed in bringing artists and craftspeople together for a utopian purpose. His process consisted of sandblasting the glass, painting it in thin layers and baking in a kiln to create a glowing surface. Under the leadership of Gropius, the Bauhaus movement made no special distinction between the applied and fine arts. His wife Annie Albers studied weaving at the Bauhaus, a choice due to her frailty (caused by Charcot-Marie-Tooth disease). He was dismissed in 1930. Ludwig Mies van der Rohe was considered the top architect in Germany when he was tapped by Gropius to take over as school director that same year. Expressionism and Futurism would have a noticeable influence on the art produced in the school alongside its specific style of geometric design that at times resembled Cubism. Paul Klee Paul Klee joined the school's faculty in 1920, bringing with him a fascination with the art and artistic processes of non-Western cultures and children that he melded with a geometric, often scientific approach to abstract painting.
