Dls 20 download offline

Source: Andrew Martonik / Android Central I've been on many a trip where I didn't have a good cell signal or Wi-Fi, and really needed to know where I was going. Thank goodness that Google Maps allows you to download maps of broad areas for offline use. You can also have them update with the latest information when you are back online. This little tip is also handy if you're in an area with congested cell signals, risk of low or no signals, or if you don't want to be tracked. I'll show you how it's done so that you can always be prepared with an exit strategy. First thing's first: if you regularly keep on Incognito mode as I do, you're going to want to disable it (temporarily). Tap on the hat and glasses icon in the top right corner of the app. Tap on Offline maps settings. Tap on Turn off Incognito. Source: Android Central Now you're ready to download offline maps to your phone. If you don't use Incognito mode, you can ignore all of that and continue on with the steps below. From the Google Maps home screen, tap on your avatar in the top right corner. Tap on Offline maps from the menu. Tap on Select Your Own Map. Pinch and zoom to select an area of the map to download. Tap Download. Source: Android Central Now, if you want to go back to Incognito mode, just reverse the steps from the first section. Tap on your avatar in the top right corner. Tap on Turn on Incognito mode from the menu. Read through the pop up card on what is and is not available in Incognito mode. Source: Android Central If you don't feel comfortable bringing your phone with you, or only want to use it in an emergency situation, remember that you can still print maps from Google Maps for real offline use. Google Maps even allows you to type in notes on the map before you print. Source: Android Central Stay alert, respect your fellow humans, and get to where you're going safely. Google added an offline viewing mode to its Android Maps app around this time last year, and the addition proved to be a popular one. To activate the feature, all you needed to do was select the offline option from the pull-up menu, define the area, and watch it download. It was very easy, and made traveling with your Android phone a convenient (and cheap) experience. Now, Google has decided to remove the familiar offline mapping feature from its newly released version of the app, but don't despair, it hasn't disappeared entirely. Google has just confused everyone by changed the way it operates. Here's how you save maps for offline viewing in version 7 of Google Maps: Open Maps: Open the Maps app, and go to the area you'd like to save for offline use. Type OK Maps: Tap the search bar at the top of the screen and type, "OK maps." If typing is a little low-tech, then if you tap the microphone, you can tell it, "OK maps," instead. Let the download begin: After tapping the search key, Maps will start downloading your selected location, and you'll see an on-screen message saying it has cached the chosen area once it's done. It seems you can drag the screen around, and zoom in and out to ensure Maps will continue caching until you get tired of it, or the phone runs out of storage space. Info stored in a new area: Another key difference is the way Maps stores the cached information. Instead of appearing under the My Places menu, you just scroll back to the area and the information will be ready and waiting. So, it's not all bad news. Offline maps are still a part of Google Maps – they're just a hidden feature. It's not the only thing Google has removed either. The latest version says goodbye to Latitude check-ins, and the My Maps feature; however, My Maps will be back in the future. Should you feel these are an essential part of Google Maps, then we'd suggest turning off the auto-update and bypassing version 7. Also, if your Android phone doesn't run Android 4.0 Ice Cream Sandwich or later, then don't worry, the app isn't compatible with earlier versions of the OS, so no update will be forthcoming. If you've discovered anything else about the way the offline caching feature works in Google Maps, feel free to share it with us in the comments. Updated on 07/11/2013 at 10:00am by Andy: Google has performed a quick about turn regarding the offline mapping feature in Maps, and has added a "Make this map area available offline" option to its search card. The OK Maps option still works too, if for some reason you preferred that method. Article originally published on 07/10/2013. Editors' Recommendations So, you're going off the grid?
