He showed me his resume a few days ago, and there, in a small press at the bottom, they were four words that appear on almost every curriculum à € "and that are now irrelevant: à € cèffiters available upon request.à € like Millions of other job seekers was willing to share selected opinions on itself once a company expressed interest. The fact is that it no longer matters. The reason? Your references are everywhere, all the time, if you want to share them or not. Wherever we go, leave electronic footprints. When you publish a complaint on epinions.com, a review on Amazon, or a comment in a newsgroup, your opinions are shared, with everyone, forever. Buying a home, default on a credit card, change the jobs a couple of times à € à €™ all there, online, for everyone to see. The cost of a background control is a fraction of what it was. Private detectives no longer do your homework. They control their e-mail, type in a few numbers, and "wham! À €" data (more than you can imagine) is just there. Of course, they are not just employees who are leaving a track. Organizations face an even bigger challenge. Consider the case of a company that hired me to make some speech throughout the country. Instead of paying me as we contracted (with the money they go to charity), bounced three checks. After trying to call them, write them and work with them, I finally had to take a lawyer. They have never paid. In the old days, it would be that. But today, there is an online record. A quick google search for the company name would take you to my blog, which will make you think of two To make any kind of business with them. If you manage a restaurant, each patron is maintaining the score for Zagat. If you are a politician, every potential potential It is also a potential online Pundit. It's pretty easy to get paranoid about this. Pretty easy to imagine that every client is a potential branded destroyer. But every customer is also a potential brand builder. Dozens of people have posted positive reviews on PlanetFeedback (now known as IntelliSeek) and Epinions.com for brands you wouldn't expect, like Chili's restaurants. Here are excerpts from a post: à ¤ Do you like the service that is exceptional? Do you like having a fair price for what you get? You can get all this in Chili, because it has everything you want in a restaurant. . . . I had a fried chicken steak with corn on the panicle and mashed potatoes. The fried chicken steak was as big as the dish, and is made with black meat angus. . . .à ¤ Wow! One thing is becoming crystal clear: you are your reference. If a friend tells me a game isn't right, I don't go. The recommendation of a friend will also determine my choice of service for the care of the lawn or an island on vacation. My editor just sent me an email asking for a potential author - and if I can't back up the author's version of our report, he won the contract. No person or company can escape their past. It is no longer possible to change prices with impunity, because old price lists can be cached at the Internet Archive Wayback Machine (www.archive.org), which regularly takes snapshots of websites and stores them forever. With a little care, do not hire a manager with a history of abusing his employees, because the lawsuits are all in the public drive. What are we supposed to do? Should we worry and live in fear of our past actions and words that come back to haunt us? I don't think so. There is a new opportunity, a new opportunity sitting here, waiting for organizations and individuals to take advantage of it: spend your future creating your past, starting now. Live your life out loud, well aware that anything you say can (and will) be used against you (or for you). He treats every client as if he could turn himself into a testimony. He treats every salesman like he can give you a recommendation. And then, when the time comes, the seeds you sowed will pay off: blogs, newsgroups, professional organizations and all the rest are perfect for someone who wants to leave a lively and positive path. You can choose to use the new tools or to become a victim of them. My sister? She no longer offers to provide her amazing references on request. Now she sent him instead of her rÀ ¤ sumÀ ¤©. Seth Godin (Seth@sethgodin.com) is a New York based author. Purple cow: transform your activity by being remarkable (portfolio, 2003) is her latest book. Philip Friedman / Studio D A woman who works and socializes is in the final stages interview for another job. He left you a voicemail asking if he could use you as a reference. Outside of work, the woman is a good friend. But your work ethic needs to be improved, and you'd be hesitant to recommend hiring What to say to your friend? 1) Decline. And if she asks why, what don't you perform well about the interviews - even if they're not yours. 2) I accept, so be honest when requested by its potential employer of its working capacities. 3) You probably won't receive the job anyway, then you agree to be used as a reference and then Fib when you were asked of his abilities. The correct answer: (2) Your best bet is to be honest and Tactful. Make sure you tell the person who contacts you for the reference you are a collaborator, not a supervisor. (In many cases, potential employers prefer to question immediate supervisors rather than work colleagues.) If you are still asked, avoid making calls for judgments and do not voluntarily do negative information. Answer the special questions that you are asked, and if you have to give an unfavorable answer, be constructive.
